

The truth

5 0 1

Chapter 1 by Mike Leary

Sometimes we run to get away for something. Sometimes just to gain something. But other times we run from ourselves our fears our lives. Sometimes we see ourselves in the mirror and say that's not me. And then we run away from the truth. Telling ourselves that we are not as bad we are not as sinful as we really are. But in you take a look at what I am I am not a man even though I wish to be I am not strong thought I view myself as such. I am not a nice guy though I try to be. I burn down friendship and lie to get them back. I am the man that looks into the mirror and see a monster and yell and say kill the beast. Thoughts that follow me fight the beast that I am that I've created that I have projected on to another innocent. Once people see me for who I really am. I guess they are the lucky ones. They rid themselves of a burden that no one should have to carry. My wrath in person is horrendous. From a distance I keep calm and the already thin patience slowly strains to keep anger at bay. I would rather face an enemy than an enigma. I am the bad guy in this. And I admit this. What does that make me . The man who sees his own fate and try's to change it. No I run with my title and try and do good with it as much as I can. I stumble and fall more than ever as I grow can I ever just go away I want to be left alone but have someone who cares for me enough to bring me back from the end from ashes from my fate . But as I know it will not happen at all ever women I've ever had feeling for have seen me and been sickened by what they've seen. Ever friend I've ever had has gotten close and then we grow fast lay far apart because of what I've done. What I am. People who have fallen in love with me I get board with and throw them away and then blame them for what I did .
